1. In the spring of 1950 work was started on the diversion of the Studena River (sic) flowing approximately 3.5 kilometers southeast from the village of Lyubimets, Svilengrad Okoliya. Two bridges, one a highway bridge and another a bridge for the railroad running to Svilengrad, cross the river at this point. The river was diverted by digging a new river bed 1.5 meters deep near the old one. Dikes two meters high were built on both side of the new river bed. This diversion, which extends from the Maritsa River to the railroad line running to Svilengrad, was completed at the end of 1950. Thus, the flooded meadows in the vicinity were drained.
2. Three Soviet specialists and seven Bulgarians who arrived in Lyubimets in the fall of 1950 surveyed the area for 45 days for the purpose of determining the suitability of this location for a new airfield. These surveys made in the flat area in the vicinity of Uvata (sic) at location N 41-47-45, E 26-07-10; this area formerly consisted of 800-1,000 decarees of meadows in addition to much arable land which extends towards the Maritsa River. No actual construction work had started at the time [ ] left this area.
